Two Countries, One Forest

(2C1Forest) is an ecoregional conservation collaboration that is crossing boundaries to build connectivity in the Northern Appalachian/Acadian ecoregion. Our collaboration is built across organizations, institutions, companies and geography to insure long term viability of wildlife populations, ecological processes and vibrant human communities.

Join us to learn about the science-based, systematic analysis of this unique ecoregion. See from an ecoregional perspective the changes that are occurring and what they mean for industry, governments, municipalities, First Nations, agriculture, and others.

Make connections with other groups and individuals and create on-the-ground changes in partnership with organizations, industry, researchers, and others representing a wide range of interests across the ecoregion.

Become part of an ecoregion-wide initiative built on science, collaboration and innovation. Be part of achieving the vision for a healthy ecoregion where human and ecological interests exist in sustainable harmony.
